Ridge is perfect for wind

The July 4 "My View" on wind energy named counties in Utah for wind energy sources. Apparently they hadn't considered the mountain ridge line of the Wasatch Mountains. For example, I have been on Farmington and Bountiful peaks a number of times. There has always been a strong wind there. Windmills along the ridge would not only generate power, they would be interesting to view and still not harm the forest park behind them. The savings in fuel would certainly be worth it.
